Best by design: Kansas State University APDesign programs shine in latest rankings by DesignIntelligence

The graduate programs in architecture, interior architecture and landscape architecture offered by Kansas State University's College of Architecture, Planning & Design are among the best in the nation, according to annual rankings by DesignIntelligence.

In addition, DesignIntelligence has selected two of the college's faculty members as among the most outstanding educators in the nation. Tim De Noble, dean of the college, and Stephanie Rolley, professor and head of the landscape architecture and regional & community planning department, were named to DesignIntelligence's 25 Most Admired Educators for 2016-17. Kansas State University is one of only three institutions - and the only public university - with two faculty members to make this distinguished list.

DesignIntelligence rankings for the college, which is also known as APDesign, tab it as the nation's No. 5 graduate program in landscape architecture and No. 7 graduate program in interior architecture. The graduate program in architecture is No. 18. Kansas State University is one of only four schools to be ranked in the top 20 on all three of DesignIntelligence's graduate program lists. American Curves: Nature, Race and the Origins of the Modern Highway

Distinguished Lecture Series - Ekdahl Lecture
October 12, 2016, 4:00PM
K-State Union Forum Hall

We tend to associate the emergence of the American expressway with the Eisenhower era and the Interstate highway program. But the origins of the modern motor road date back much further, to a series of pathways that in Rochester, New York in the 1820s. The first of these, the Bruce Road Parkway, was begun not as a road but as an effort to secure a family railroad roadway, and by one of the most provocative figures in American environmental history, Madison Drake. Drake will explore the roots of the modern American highway, research the individuals who brought it into being and unpack the design ideas that helped shape an infrastructure that would change the world.

Presented by the Center for the Study of the American West

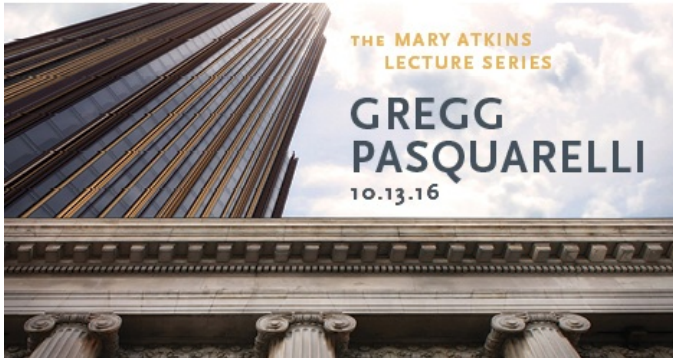

"We tend to associate the emergence of the American expressway with the Eisenhower era and the Interstate highway program. But the origins of the modern motor road date back much further, to a series of parkways built in Westchester County, New York in the 1920s. The first of these, the Bronx River Parkway, was begun not as a road but as an effort to restore a terribly polluted waterway, led by one of the most problematic figures in American environmental history, Madison Grant. This talk will explore the roots of the modern American highway, examine the individuals who brought it into being and unpack the design ideals that helped shape an infrastructure that would change the world."

Attendance is expected.

Gregg Pasquarelli - Nelson Atkins Lecture, KCMO

This extraordinary lecture, being presented in KC is open free of charge to the first 42 students to sign up! K-State transportation is provided! Please send an email to tjackson@ksu.edu to sign up as soon as possible.

Join us for an inspiring evening with National Academy Fellow and board member of the Architectural League of New York, Gregg Pasquarelli. As a Founding Principal of SHoP Architects, a firm known for its diverse expertise and open-minded process, Pasquarelli has completed some of SHoP's most prominent projects, including the Bardays Center at Atlantic Yards in Brooklyn, New York. His catalogue of high-profile projects have helped earn the studio awards such as, Fast Company's "Most Innovative Architecture Firm in the World" in 2014, and the Smithsonian/Cooper Hewitt's "National Design Award for Architecture" in 2009.

Pasquarelli's impact on the field of architecture begins at the ground-level shaping a new generation of architects. He served as Saarinen Professor of Architecture at Yale University, and has also held teaching positions at Columbia University, the University of Virginia, Syracuse University, and the University of Florida. He challenges himself to create an understanding that innovative and beautiful architecture and technological proficiency are not mutually exclusive.

The Mary Atkins Lecture honors the legacy of Mary Atkins, a Kentucky schoolteacher who married a Kansas City businessman. After developing a deep appreciation for the arts in her later years, she bequeathed her estate for the establishment of an art museum. The Nelson-Atkins resulted from the combined generosity of Mary Atkins and William Rockhill Nelson. The lecture series was established in 1995 to invite the finest artistic and cultural leaders to share their perspectives.
