My course helps students access qualitative data and integrate it into their environmental investigations. Students learn how to see the built form, human interactions, and planning process through a qualitative lens. The goal of this course is to refresh planners' knowledge, and to suggest what is lost by ignoring qualitative methods. The class provides a context for answering why and how questions, and investigating differing perceptions and values. In addition to traditional methods, such as field research, case studies, focus group, historical and archival research, and ethnography, this course provides student with the skills to employ visual methodologies in urban studies.
