K-State Diversity Summit - November 3

Call for proposals: Diversity Summit adds research forum

The K-State Diversity Summit, in partnership with the Institute for Student Learning Assessment, provides an opportunity for students, faculty and staff to learn about research and teaching practices that relate to diversity and inclusion learning outcomes across disciplines. This year's summit will include a research forum from 4-5 p.m. Nov. 3 to showcase diversity-focused research, scholarly and creative activity, and discovery, or RSCAD. The forum will be at the conclusion of the free daylong summit and will help inform the community of past and ongoing research efforts and how they foster progress in the area of diversity. All are invited to both the summit and the forum.

Important Shop Update

Dear students,

If you need to use the shop facilities at APDwest, you will need to go through Shop Training.

To schedule training email me (Richard Thompson - rht@ksu.edu) with a list of times throughout the week that will work for you. It will take about an hour and a half. Please try to be as flexible as possible. I will need to group students together in order to be efficient with time. Groups are limited to 8 students.

Best,
Richard

Lecture Title: American Curves: Nature, Race and the Origins of the Modern Highway

"We tend to associate the emergence of the American expressway with the Eisenhower era and the Interstate highway program. But the origins of the modern motor road date back much further, to a series of parkways built in Westchester County, New York in the 1920s. The first of these, the Bronx River Parkway, was begun not as a road but as an effort to restore a terribly polluted waterway, led by one of the most problematic figures in American environmental history, Madison Grant. This talk will explore the roots of the modern American highway, examine the individuals who brought it into being and unpack the design ideals that helped shape an infrastructure that would change the world."

Attendance is expected.
